

Cynthia L. Gilman, JD

Vice President, Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine Director, Center for Public-Private Partnerships

Cynthia Gilman, JD, is a Vice President of the Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine (HJF) where she leads the Center for Public-Private Partnerships (CP3). In that role, Ms. Gilman directs efforts to foster collaborations among the Department of Defense, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences, civilian academia, and industry to advance the long-term health and well-being of America's service members, veterans, and their families. Ms. Gilman also leads HJF's annual Heroes of Military Awards dinner, and The Veteran Metrics Initiative. Prior to joining HJF, Ms. Gilman was a partner for 11 years in a Washington, DC law firm, after practicing law for 10 years in San Diego, CA. In addition to her work in support of military service members and veterans, Ms. Gilman is a passionate advocate for cancer research having served on the Eastern Cooperative Oncology Group (ECOG) Breast Cancer Core Committee. She also served on the Executive Board for the Foundation for the National Institutes of Health's Observational Medical Outcomes Partnership. Ms. Gilman received her Bachelor's degree, with honors, from Emory University, and her JD degree, with honors, from the University of San Diego School of Law where she was a member of the Law Review. She also studied one year at the London School of Economics, London, England.